QUESTION SIX - 20 MARKS

ONE UNIVERSITY STUDENT WAS ASKED TO WRITE A REPORT ESSAY ON PLAGIARISM. THEY WROTE THE PASSAGE BELOW WHICH WAS CONDEMNED BECAUSE IT WAS WRONGLY DONE. IMPROVE THIS PASSAGE BY DRAFTING A SCHOLARLY SCHEMATIC REPORT.

A GOOD SCHOLARLY INTRODUCTION AND CONCLUSION WILL EARN YOU HIGH MARKS.

PLAGIARISM

Plagiarism is the theft or appropriation of someone else's work without proper acknowledgement, presenting the materials as if they were one's own. Sometimes plagiarism is simple dishonesty. If you buy or borrow or steal an essay to run in as your own work, you are plagiarizing. If you copy word-for-word or change a work here and there while copying without enclosing the copied passage in quotation marks and identifying the author, you are also plagiarizing.

Stating then using them someone else's idea in your own works, jotting down notes and ideas from a source and without proper attributions to the authors or title in introductory phrases is plagiarism.

Another way to plagiarize is to allow other students or friends to give you too much rhetorical help or do too much editing and proof reading of your work. If you have received substantial help in any way from people whose names will not appear as authors of the paper, you should acknowledge that help.

Plagiarism Is also the use of text downloaded from the internet, downloading or copying pictures, photographs or diagrams, borrowing statistics from another source or person without acknowledging your sources.

TYPES OF PLAGIARISM .

There are different forms of plagiarism and these are as follows;

1. "Copy and Paste plagiarism"

   Any time you lift a sentence or significant phrase intact from a source, you must use quotation marks and reference the source.

CamScanner

2. "Word Switch Plagiarism"

If you take a sentence from a source and change around a few words* it is still plagiarism. If you want to quote a sentence, then you need to put it in quotation marks and cite the author and article. But quoting source articles should only be done if what the quote says is particularly useful in the point you are trying to make in what you are writing,". In many cases, paraphrasing and then citing the original sources is a better option.

3. "Style Plagiarism"

"When you follow a source sentence by sentence or paragraph-by paragraph, it is plagiarism, even though none of your sentences are exactly like those in the source article or even in the same order. What you are copying in this case is the author's reasoning style.

4. "Metaphor Plagiarism"

Metaphors are used either to make an Idea clearer or give the reader an analogy that touches the senses or emotions better than a plain description of the object or process. Metaphor, then are important part of an author's creative style. If you cannot come up with your own metaphor to illustrate an important idea then use the metaphor in the Source Article, but give the author credit for it". (Liles, Jeffrey A and Michoel E. Rozalski 2004:91-101)

5. "Idea Plagiarism"

"If the author of the source article expresses a creative idea or suggests a solution to a problem, the idea or solution must be clearly attributed to the author. Students seem to have a hard time distinguishing author's ideas and/or solutions from public domain information. Public domain information is any idea or solution about which people in the field accept as general knowledge. You do not need to reference a general description of a black hole. The escape velocity of earth is also general knowledge and needs no reference. The distance to the centre of the Galaxy is also general knowledge. However, a new idea about how to look for black holes or a new solution to a physics problem needs to be attributed to the authors. If you don't know what is accepted as public domain in a particular field, ASK" (Liles et al.)
